All lectures will start on time, sine tempore.

In recent years collaborations between scholars and artists have in many respects become a common phenomenon. There is not only an increase of work of scholars on art and artistic practices, but also an increasing emphasis on research practises among artists. Also the related art world, museums and funding bodies follow this trend in engaging with such projects and explicitly funding them.

This lecture series aims to investigate this phenomenon and to look into various methodologies and theories addressing artistic and cultural practices, as well as the influence of aesthetics on knowledge production both in social sciences/humanities and in the arts.
