An unpleasant surprise emerges in a phone call to her mother: "Your father has financial troubles. He must sell the school". Being shocked by this news, the film director, daughter of the headmaster Mustapha Naous, immediately flies back to Beirut from Paris to attend to the problem. Intimate and bizarre conversations with her family unfold and bring back flashbacks of school life from the past in comparison to now. Intriguingly insightful passages paint a beautiful portrait of a family that mirrors the political and social changes in their country.

Dr Saadi Nikro has a background in cultural studies and critical theory, and is a research fellow at Zentrum Moderner Orient. He is part of the research field Trajectories of Lives and Knowledge and is currently working on his project "Edward Said: Intersecting Pathways, Knowledge and Biographical Inventories in a Geographical Register".
